GRAFTED PLANTS

Due to some influence in the understock beyond our control, occasionally a heretofore solid color, pink or red, variety will bloom variegated. We guarantee the scion as to variety, but if it blooms true or not is another matter.

Grafted plants often "sucker" from the understock. These "suckers" should be removed upon detection.

Dieback

This disease usually follows a rather definite course. The effects appear after the damage has been done, during the early Summer, at which time the leaves of the new growth lose their sheen and rapidly die and turn brown. If the stem is severed, it is usually found that there is an affected area within the woody tissue of the stem, which may or may not extend all the way back to, and even into, the trunk of the plant.

The following suggestions will doubtless reduce losses: All plants should be watched carefully for blighting twigs. These should be removed as soon as detected. This is particularly true of the small shoots on large branches and the trunk. Cankers on the trunk and branches are not easily seen. The fungus grows slowly in these tissues, and considerable time may elapse between initial infection and the girdling. In the interim considerable inoculum may be produced.

Success with sanitary measures depends largely upon the early detection of the cankers. When they are discovered before complete girdling, surgical treatment may save the plant. All discolored tissue should be removed. All wounds should be treated with a good wound dressing. Washing wounds with Fermate before dressing we find to be very effective.
